AND URBANISATION

Study for two weeks in a Venetian Palace and learn from the past to re-build the future for sustainable, healthy cities. The design studio is led by Dr David Howard (Kellogg College Oxford) and Dr Matthew Hardy (The Prince's Foundation). The COVID-19 crisis will not dominate the studio's learning focus but rather reflect on how urban populations, and practitioners engage in the built environment and have contended with health crisis in the past.

This 12-day programme will ask students to explore the potential to learn from the past, as well as from present technologies and practice, in order to design healthier cities for the future; and to retro-fit today's urban spaces to cater for new challenges that may evolve.

A key emphasis of the programme will be a focus on Venice, the city itself, exploring how artists, architects, urban developers and denizens have responded to regenerate the built environment, and everyday urban living.
